The Pacific Northwest fuels your senses

Oregon and Washington... The Pacific Northwest stirs our senses. Perhaps it's the moisture in the air, but the colors are almost textured. This area was inhabited by indigenous people who thrived on plentiful seafood. We still savor wild salmon, halibut, shellfish, berries of all sorts, plus native fruits, vegetables and cheeses. We also love the microbreweries, wines, and ciders. Boats ferry us between islands. The region is blessed with diverse cultures and vibrant communities. The coast has black sand beaches and the interior has wild rivers and superb wineries. The art scene is cutting-edge and nature is treasured. Experience it.

OREGON

Authentic Oregon, from Coast to Cascades

Portland is a chic town with a kicky personality. Consider exploring a Japanese Garden with tea room, the arts district, or a planetarium with hands-on exhibitions. Out of the city and to the ocean, the coast is a soft place that feels like a watercolor painting. Sunsets melt into the sea. In Central Oregon, miles of sand dunes and freshwater lakes wait to be discovered.

Heading inland, colors become more vibrant with every shade of green imaginable. There's a hot springs. Stop. Soak. Rest in a sweet lodge on the mighty Umpqua River. (Dreams come easily here.) The Umpqua National Park is nestled on the western slope of the Cascades—there is drama here. Heading north, Eugene is the place to kick back and go wine tasting in the Willamette Valley. Every lush slice of this life could only happen in Oregon's Pacific Northwest.
